

It may also be useful to consider the elections for school boards of trustees. If board of trustee elections were held at the same time as local council elections, council candidates would enjoy a considerable halo-effect from their council campaign and the board of trustee elections would be skewed in their favour as a result. Skewing results in this way would generally be considered undesirable. Skewing licensing trust elections in this manner is equally undesirable.

We think it should be considered if holding elections for licensing trusts at a different time to local councils would be of sufficient benefit to outweigh the additional cost.
